The Chicago Urban League's research report "A Portrait of Prisoner Reentry in Illinois states,"

"released ex-offenders reported that their lack of job skills and work experience prior to prison, along with gaps in employment history due to time out of the labor market while in prison and the stigma of a felony conviction, compounded their struggles to find employment.

During the time they spend in prison, they may lose work skills, forfeit the opportunity to gain work experience, and sever interpersonal connections that could provide information about jobs. After release, the stigma of their ex-prisoner status makes the job search even more difficult."

Veterans face the challenge of transitioning their military skills into a society whose views on leadership, teamwork and urgency are understandably dissimilar. This for the most part, is why maintaining occupational stability is a volatile pathway for many of "us" to navigate. PPC's goal is to convey a strategic and skillfully minded body of knowledge that will enable its membership to bridge those challenges.

Each year, nearly 700,000 men, women, juveniles and youth are released from prison into communities across the United States. Many do not make a successful transition: two-thirds are arrested within three years and one-half are returned to prison, either for parole violations or new crimes.

This revolving door phenomenon is costly in terms of criminal justice system expenditures not to mention the human and social costs borne by crime victims, returning prisoners, their families, and the communities in which they reside.¹

Research has shown that employment and educational attainment can significantly reduce the likelihood that individuals in recovery, who also have criminal records, will relapse and recidivate.³

LIVE UNITED

Ex-offenders often return to their community the way they went into prison: lacking adequate education, with little or no access to labor markets and with few or no connections to positive social support networks. They are likely to experience addiction, mental illness, domestic violence and a myriad of other challenges that can contribute to an increased likelihood of return to criminal activity, arrest, and re-incarceration.

Agape provides comprehensive services to help stop the revolving door. We understand that an individual's successful return often depends upon the support they receive. We are committed to working with an ex-offender's family and our community partners to help them make a successful transition.

Reentry Services

- Case Management
We assess a participant's range of needs and help them develop a plan. We work with other social service providers and court/legal systems to ensure overall case coordination.
- Advocacy for Housing
We work with private landlords, community housing agencies, homeless shelters, and other housing providers to secure housing.
- Employment/Entrepreneurship/Education
We have an on-site computer lab and offer one-on-one assistance with resume development, job search and links to employment. Agape employment mentors assist with educational goal development and career counseling as well as workshops to pursue entrepreneurship.
- Identification
We help participants obtain their birth certificate, social security card and photo identification. We also help participants obtain school records/transcripts needed to obtain official identification.
- Records Expunge/Seal
We host Expungement/Sealing Workshops with the Office of the State Appellate Defender Office. During the workshop, a lawyer is available one-to-one and to answer questions related to the expungement and sealing processes.
- Referrals
We provide referrals to a variety of community organizations to ensure other needs are met.
- Transportation
We provide transportation assistance to help participants get to job interviews and appointments.
- Mental Health Services
We provide mental health assessments and counseling.
- Anger Management
We provide a court/parole approved 8-hour anger management class.
- Substance Abuse Services
We provide evaluations, counseling, and drug testing.
- HIV Counseling and Testing
We provide risk reduction and HIV Counseling & Testing services.
